

ADVERTISEMENT

Gordon invents "the Gordon."

SEARCH input field

Home | Home Delivery | Site Map | Archives | Print Edition | Advertise | Contact Us | Help

Join now!

REGISTER LOGIN

January 23, 2005

E-mail story Print Most E-Mailed

advertisement

MARKETPLACE classifieds and more

- Find a Job
- Find a Car
- Find a Home
- Find an Apartment
- More Classifieds
- Personals
- Newspaper Ads

SoCal Business Directory

Find grocery coupons

shopLocal.com

FIND SALES & DEALS

Your ZIP GO

PLACE AN AD

calendarlive.com

Art, Theater, Night Life Movies, Music, TV, Dining

Travel

- California
- Hawaii
- Las Vegas
- Mexico
- Africa
- Asia
- Europe
- Worldwide
- 2005 Travel Sourcebook
- Flight Tracker

Columns

- Cruise News
- Gear & Gadgets
- Healthy Traveler
- Her World
- Kids on Board
- On a Budget
- Postcards From Paris
- The Internet Traveler
- Tours & Cruises
- Travel Insider
- Travel Q&A

- The World
- The Nation
- California | Local
- Business
- Politics
- Sports
- Travel
- Editorials, Op-Ed
- Sections
- Arts & Entertainment

THE SOURCEBOOK

More locales ban smoking

By Jon Boroshok, Special to The Times

The good news for nonsmokers: At least six states and hundreds of cities have followed California's lead and banned smoking in most public indoor areas, including restaurants and hotels.

The bad news: Smokers simply have been pushed outside, in many cases to those places where fresh-air-loving travelers may go for hiking, sunning, alfresco dining — now all bound in cigarette haze.

For some nonsmokers, particularly parents with young children and anyone with asthma, a smoke-free atmosphere is a crucial factor in choosing vacation destinations.

For this reason, more tourist destinations are going beyond legal requirements and becoming 100% smoke-free.

In San Diego County, Solana Beach banned smoking on the beach in late 2003.

"On city beach cleanup days, 50% to 60% of the litter was butts," said Assistant City Manager Matt Rodriguez.

Since the ban, "more kids and families are using the beaches, and tourism has increased," he said. "Our beach is not an ashtray."

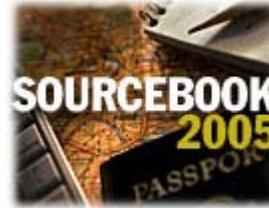

Walter McLeod, board member of the Washington-based nonprofit Clean Beaches Council, cited a cultural shift in the way people behave on beaches and other public lands.

"Smoke-free beaches are a great, positive, growing trend," he said.

He said Florida and the Carolinas were starting to zone certain parts of beaches as smoke-free, and towns in New Jersey and Delaware were studying similar moves.

"In the last five years, facilities like stadiums, outdoor public markets and parks have gone smoke-free in response to people's desires," said Paul Knepprath, vice president of government relations for the American Lung Assn. of California. "Especially families with kids."

Search for stories

Search for tactics and tips that will put you on the path to a trouble-free trip.

Stories

All dropdown menu

SEARCH

Times Headlines

Travels with Bailey sniff out hospitality that's pet-friendly

Travels with Bailey sniff out hospitality that's pet-friendly

The joy of living in the Travel Moment

12 tips for bridging the cultural divide

Vacationers think outside the cabana more >

Most Emailed

O.C.'s Mystery of the Deep: Invasion of the Jumbo Squid

U.S. Contractor Slain in Iraq Had Alleged Graft

A Nuremberg Lesson

> more emailed stories

ATTEND THE EVENT ...

Books
 Chess
 Column One Columns Education
 Environment
 Food
 Health
 Highway 1
 Home
 Kids' Reading Room
 Magazine
 Obituaries
 Outdoors
 Real Estate
 Religion
 Science & Medicine
 Style & Culture
 Sunday Opinion
 Technology
 Times Poll
 Corrections

Editions

Print Edition
 National (PDF)
 Wireless

Extras

College Connection
 Sweepstakes
 Crossword
 Horoscope
 Lottery
 Multimedia
 Traffic
 Weather
 Week in Focus

Archives

Enter Keyword(s):

Detailed Search

SITE MAP

Los Angeles Times

HOME DELIVERY

- Subscribe
- Manage My Account
- Gift Subscription

IN THE COMMUNITY

- Times in Education
- Reading by 9
- LA Times Books
- Student Journalism
- LA Times Family Fund
- Times-Mirror Foundation
- LA Times Events

MEDIA CENTER CLICK HERE

About The Times

MARKETPLACE

classifieds and more

- Find a Job
- Find a Car
- Find a Home
- Find an Apartment
- More Classifieds
- Place an Ad
- Newspaper Ads
- Grocery Coupons
- Shopping
- Personals
- Times Guides
- Recycler.com

Partners

Still, rules can be inconsistent in California. Disneyland, Six Flags Magic Mountain and Universal Studios Hollywood prohibit smoking near waiting lines, eating areas, pools and children's areas. Knott's Berry Farm, however, allows smoking in outdoor eating areas and its midway.

Holiday World and Splashin' Safari amusement park in Santa Claus, Ind., banned smoking except in a few designated areas last year at the request of guests.

"They said, 'If you really were a family park, you wouldn't allow smoking,' " said Will Koch, president and general manager. "We took that to heart. Families are our specialty, and so we accepted the challenge."

He said complaints from smokers were minimal and attendance was up 14% last year.

"I don't know if I'd give the smoking policy the credit," he said, "but it is clear that the policy didn't hurt."

Since 2003 most areas in the San Diego Zoo have been smoke-free, including the dining terraces, bus tours, Skyfari aerial tram, show amphitheatres and any spot within 20 feet of a doorway.

"Zoos, like all public institutions, are trying to do what's best for visitors and animals," said Jim Hubing, director of the Henry Vilas Zoo in Madison, Wis.

That zoo, where about half of the 500,000 annual visitors are children, banned smoking four years ago. Complaints, Hubing said, have been few, and the new policy has lessened litter too.

The Silver Lake Winery in Woodinville, Wash., has written guidelines for tasting room etiquette that state: "Any casual or serious wine tasting requires no smoking and no wearing of perfumes or colognes that would overwhelm the delicate nuance of the wine. We therefore do not allow smoking in our building and request that you refrain from smoking anywhere near our tasting facility."

Explorations in Travel, which runs adventure programs for women 40 and older in Guilford, Vt., asks guests not to smoke in common areas, indoors or outdoors.

"We rarely get smokers on our vacations but instituted the policy for the occasional smoker that joins us," founder Debbie Jacobs said.

For some travelers, however, awkward situations and disappointment remain all too common. Some tips:

- Before making reservations, call the chamber of commerce or visitors bureau at your destination and ask about local smoking laws. Also ask whether any lodgings or attractions are known for their smoke-free environment.
- Ask about rules on smoking in public areas, including the pool and outdoor dining areas.
- If the people at the adjacent table, behind you in line or next to you at the park decide to light up, ask politely if they would not smoke. They might just comply. If you object because your child is nearby, say so.
- Inform management if someone breaks the rules in a nonsmoking area. It's difficult for management to enforce policy if violations go unnoticed.

If you want other stories on this topic, search the Archives at latimes.com/archives.

TOP OF THE TIMES
 Click here to sign up for the latest
 Los Angeles Times news delivered to your inbox.
 Los Angeles Times latimes.com

SUBSCRIBE to the Los Angeles Times.
click here

ARCHIVES ACCESS

Click any related topic(s) below to access free abstracts of Archives articles.

TOURISM

THE SOURCEBOOK

SMOKING

TRAVEL

TRAVEL TOURISM

SMOKING

Enter phrase:

ProQuest Archiver